

Appreciate Australia

In a country as modernised and multiculturally inhabited as Australia, we really can find the best of just about everything the modern world could ask for.

We have wonderful food, a fair and democratic system of government that recognises women as being equal to men, and we have a beautiful, clean environment with one of the cleanest and most stunning environments ever seen or existed on earth.

Our legal system is strong and enables us to live quite safely, knowing that our rights and obligations in society are fully protected under this system. Our crime rate is comparatively low in relation to that of other nations which is one of the reasons that Australia is very popular for immigrants and tourists alike. Visitors find our people warm and hospitable while our fellow citizens find us to be supportive and loyal.

When people come to Australia they are impressed with our wildlife and our love of being outdoors, enjoying the health benefits that being in fresh, clean air brings.

Rare is the voice that is not impressed with Australia's people, diversity, hospitality and environment. It really is the "must see" nation of the world.

Causing damage to public and private property is disrespectful, thoughtless and insensitive, and in some cases can be dangerous as well. Damage to public property costs the Australian Government millions of dollars every year in repairs and replacements, so we must not damage the public or private property. We must appreciate Australia.
